A family of aliens receives a warm welcome in this story that draws upon principles of traditional Jewish hospitality. The Abrahams are expecting a visit from their new neighbors; the visitors that arrive, however, are from a little farther away. Nevertheless, they are provided with food, drink, and a place to rest—and a helping hand to get their spaceship up and running again. Colored pencil illustrations depict the aliens wearing water glasses as hats, warily nibbling cookies, and other humorous antics.
