A child impatiently waits for snow in this tongue-in-cheek picture book about living in the moment. Certain that “nothing is as fun as snow,” a little boy keeps peering out the window, awaiting the expected storm; with his eyes on the sky, he misses the increasingly strange happenings below. Playful illustrations slice between the boy’s boredom indoors and a wide shot of the street, where firemen, monster trucks, and wild animals gather—all as the boy declares: “nothing happening out there.”
