

Rail

Kai Carlson-Wee

BOA Editions (Apr 24, 2018)

Softcover $16.00 (104pp)

978-1-942683-58-2

Long stretches of hunger, sleep deprivation, filth, fear-filled nights under bridges, and the accompanying existential questions will leave a mark on a man, and his poetry. Kai Carlson-Wee lays it out there in this shy, wistful, forthright collection, and the mark is now winningly shared with the reader. A former Wallace Stegner Fellow with an MFA from Wisconsin-Madison, his work has appeared in Ploughshares, Gulf Coast, Best New Poets, TriQuarterly, and elsewhere.

Posers

*Outside the bookstore in downtown Seattle
we huddle away from the rain. Two days out of the mountains and looking to hitchhike
a ride down to Plain. Scrape a few dollars together for food. Cars move quietly over the road.
Rain beats down on the blue plastic awning we've jimmy-rigged over our heads. There are three of us asking for spare change and handouts.
Night falling slowly away from the stores.
The girl named Saturday plays the guitar.
My brother and I sing softly along, working to keep us in key. We look bedraggled and crazy.
We stagger and weave in the limited range of the tarp. I think to myself I am not this hungry. I am not this desperate for any clean thing. I am only a few more weeks on the west coast. Living off food stamps, volunteer work at the Bellingham food shelf.
Squandering yogurt and leftover bread from the Trader Joe's dumpster on First. I say I am working to make myself better. Learning the rhythm and speed of my heart. The same three chords and the harmony failing. Nodding along to the sound of my brother's voice.
Trying out the words in my own mouth until
I am finally able to sing.*

MATT SUTHERLAND (May/June 2018)

Disclosure: This article is not an endorsement, but a review. The publisher of this book provided free copies of the book to have their book reviewed by a professional reviewer. No fee was paid by the publisher for this review. Foreword Reviews only recommends books that we love. Foreword

Source: <https://www.forewordreviews.com/reviews/rail/>

Magazine, Inc. is disclosing this in accordance with the Federal Trade Commission's 16 CFR, Part 255.